The overarching feel of Emanuel is understated excellence: this is not a school that shows off – but don't underestimate it. Head Robert Milne has been in situ since 2017 and has become incredibly popular in this relatively short space of time by establishing himself as someone who really listens to any need for change, takes suggestions on board and makes things happen. There's excitement about a whole host of improved site facilities that are on the horizon, including a new refectory and more green space. Each student is supported by a form tutor, who acts as their champion. The forward-thinking Life Education programme runs various initiatives supporting healthy living, mindfulness, positive mental health and more. Pupils are level-headed, quietly confident and ambitious. And what do they love the most? It's not all about the grounds and facilities but what happens within them: 'my friends and relationships. The bonds created are much more important,' says one pupil.
